SA SAN DIEGO, CAL., August 26th.—The sequel to the Stillwell murder case, which occasioned so much excitement at Hannibal, Mo., in 1898, is contained in an announcement made this morning in local papers of a divorce just granted to Fannie Hearne from Dr. Hearne, now residents of this city.

[illegible]

These complaints are said, however, to have been merely a suggestion of the evidence which it would have been possible to introduce in case there had been a contest. Intimate relations alleged to have been sustained by the Doctor with various women of San Diego are said to have afforded material for more vigorous prosecution of the case, but being advised of the material at hand the grand jury wisely allowed the case to go by default.

But Anne Stillwell was no inconsiderable person. She was a woman of a strong and liberal with himself. However that may be, when he left the Bluegrass region to ally himself

These circumstances were well known to the jury, and the fact that the defendant was regarded the cause of their disagreement. The antecedents of the family were investigated with the result that all details are set forth in the evidence. The facts have become known to the public. It is with reference to them that the greatest interest is felt. On coming to this state Dr. and Mrs. Hagan were asked to give the details of their Hagan antecedents followed them there and they finally came to this, where they were in the position, the defendant's friends in Chicago.

FROM SHEDDING TO ALFAR.

Murder, marriage, embezzlement, separation and divorce! These are the incidents of tragedy, the first act of which began at Hanford, Mo., six years ago. The subsequent scenes were laid in New York, Los Angeles and San Diego. The future alone will reveal Amos Stillwell was fairly murdered in his bed. The authors of the awful crime have never paid the penalty of the law. That eternal justice which is stricter than the laws of man has held them in score accountability to one who has followed the story of the crime can doubt.

Annika Anderson was a handsome-demi girl in Mayville. It could hardly be said that she was the belle of that old Kentucky town. She was too wifful to be altogether popular. But nobody could deny her beauty. It was untraveled even in that land of beautiful women and chivalrous men. New Agers approached her with a mixture of awe and admiration.

That was how Amos Stillwell happened to be a widower when he came to see his sisters at Greenacres.

For once this methodical man of business forgot the cardinal principles of his life—punctuality to engagements. He forgot what time it was that he called him East and that his is a far cry, but Fannin-Mason was young and had perhaps mistaken her heart's longing. She looked enchantingly beautiful by the side of her husband as they started to the station, followed by the conventional fuselage of rice and chicken. Perhaps not more beautiful than when in after years she drove away again as a bride. But ah, what changes time brings forth!

THE ORANGE-CASE BRIDE A WIDOW.
Many changes were made at the Hillwell mansion. The house was overhauled and made modern. It was very furnished and decorated throughout. Even the parlours of the children mother.

The police were making strange discoveries. One of the back doors was open, but the bolts showed signs of having been forced. On the stairs leading down to the first floor parlor matches were found, as well as some pieces of old silver money. In the dining-room burners of silver money. In the dining-room burners of silver money. In the dining-room burners of silver money.

late Mr. Stillwell never obliged to admit that her successor had exquisite taste. Mr. Stillwell himself participated in the general overturning. In his office he was supreme. His will was law, from which there was no appeal. But he ceased to govern when he entered the portals of that home over which he had ruled so long. The contrast was very great. It was the more noticeable for the reason that the millionaire seemed pleased with the new order of things. Some intimate friends called on the Stittwells one evening and found them all sitting at the dining room table outside that they might enjoy the summer air. The breeze from the river grew sharper and Mrs. Stittwell expressed a wish for a wrap. Her husband sprang like a boy to get it for her.

Side from his penchant for destroying matches. At the gate leading into the alley several $5 bills were picked up. Then the searchers found the murdered man's pocket book. Money was evidently no object to this fellow. Nothing else was missing. His must have been in the business for the pleasure it gave him.

In the alley a few feet from the gate, behind

"Isn't it pleasant out here? I always en-the millionaire.

"No, no, no," he said to go indoors. Amos, Light the gas, please."
With a laugh he arose to perform his wife's mandate, but his friends said that he was

For all that he did not have his own way, the young pecker's second marriage was far happier than his first. He loved his Fannie, and was proud of her. She recognized his worth and saw in what universal esteem he was held, and if she did not love him she respected him. A little girl that came to live with her, and who was named after her, was a heavy canton flannel nightgown. He did not think the gauzy affairs affected by women conducive to health. The one Mrs. Stillwell owned, and the one Mrs. Stillwell of her men. His wife, not for the sufferings of her early life, and young Dick Stillwell found in her an ideal stepmother. Indeed, she frequently interceded in his behalf, for his father was often harsh with him, and it was so surprising that he grew to entertain a strong liking for her.

Years passed, and Amos Stillwell prospered. Two other children came to his home, Earl and Harold. He did not grodl like most men. That was probably because he determined not to let anything disturb the busy day. He never devoured to live according to his laws. He slept on a hard bed, without springs, and the first thing he did when he arose in the morning was to saw wood for half an hour. He became a vegetarian. His one hobby was his garden.

Although his husband was never ill, Mrs. Harwood was a nervous woman. She was removed from the room. The sheets were put away, the bedding taken out, the body embalmed. The servants did not remember who ordered the chamber cleaned so soon after the murder. It was probably the doctor's order. The story is all the important detailed evidence which, in the possession of an expert, would have proved invaluable in ferreting out the murderer. The blundering began a few hours

The Coroner's Jury sat early Sunday morning. Dr. Hearne was one of the witnesses examined. He testified that he left the Mungler party at midnight and went directly to his office. He remained there but a short time before he was called about a woman who had been found dead about a block distant. He had been the house physician for the deceased. He summoned him to Mr. Stillwell's residence.

Whether Mrs. Stillwell's ailments required the constant care of her physician, only those who were frequently to say. Certain it is that he was called very frequently. Unkind persons believed that he was a busy man, but that people will do that, and nobody lent a listening ear.

On the night of December 29th, 1888, Mr. and Mrs. Stillwell dressed a card party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. and the guests of the town were there. Among the guests was Dr. Hearne. Mr. Stillwell was a high spirit. His wife, dressed as she always was, in the height of fashion, looked bareheaded. She, too, enjoyed herself. She played cards with the men. When the party was over, she announced she had won the first. At the same time she had placed the second and across the street. The book was subsequently found to be a variety that dates the attack of the most skillful expert from outside. Asked as to why she had placed pitulows on the chairs beside the children's bed, she replied that she thought they might need them for their mother's father. She answered the question readily and with apparent straightforwardness, but gave little information that

Mr. and Mrs. Stillwell retired at once. They occupied a large side room in the second story of their residence. In it were two beds. Mrs. Stillwell lay on the left, and her two children, a young girl, and a young boy, slept in the other. The two little fellows were fast asleep when their mother lay down beside them, Mollie, the

It was a happy morning when Mrs. St. Allen and her husband were married and were lying in a pool of blood. The whole neighborhood was quickly aroused. Dr. Allen, still dressed as usual to the outside of his shirt, tied the body right to the wall and then he turned to the body and said, "You had better be quiet and let me get the doctor to the altar in a second to the shrine!"

BLESSED RAIN.

The Terrible Forest Fires in Minnesota Quenched.

All the Survivors Have Been Removed to Places of Safety.

The Whole Face of the Country is Badly Changed. When the Train Reached Sandstone, Not a Sign of Building Was Left—Terrible Spectacle.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., Sept. 5.—Nearly all those who survived the terrible forest fire in northern Minnesota have now been removed to places of safety in Superior and Duluth, and a heavy rain has quenched the flames, there will be no further casualty. The work of searching for the dead is progressing in earnest and every day shows an increase in the number of dead.

When the relief train reached Sandstone, not a sign of a building was left in the town. Around or in the ruins of each house were found several human bodies, and perhaps the body of a dog, a horse or a pig. The living inhabitants of the town were brought into Superior at the depot yesterday night. At Hinkley 328 bodies were lying in the streets and in the houses. They are being buried as rapidly as possible by a committee from Pine City.

At Pokegama, on the St. Cloud division of the Great Northern, there are corpses 25 in number. The bodies are lying buried in the place. The bodies are now in a badly decomposed condition. At Partridge only two are dead, though not a building is standing. It is impossible to tell where Partridge was, but the whole country is a mass of ashes. Passenger traffic was resumed on the St. Paul and Duluth Monday, but Great Northern through trains will not be running for some time.

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 5.—There is considerable evidence that many of the fires were of incendiary origin, set by men who knew that the bodies of men and animals would be cut out, thus giving them money. The fires will also result in the loss of many thousands of dollars by non-logging capitalists for the purpose of speculation. At given time, hundreds of men will be given immediate employment.

It is thought nearly every foot of standing pine in Ontonagon county is burned—fully 500,000,000 feet. The Stator estate has lost $600,000. Trout Creek Lumber Co., $500,000. Diamond Match Co., $150,000,000. The balance is owned by homesteaders at "Ainsville and Bruce's Crossing."

Many cattle and horses were burned, but no human lives were lost, though there have been perilous situations and narrow escapes.

JUMPED INTO A WELL,
Not Even Then Had a Close Call From the Flames.

DULUTH, Minn., Sept. 5.—Oliver Dubois, a French Canadian farmer, living on the outside of the city, in the village of Sandstone, was among the 250 refugees from that stricken spot. He saved his life by jumping into the bottom of a dry well. He was nearly killed by a very few who took such a refuge and did not find it a grave ready dug. His experience was similar in many ways to that of scores and hundreds of others, but it shows the fearful speed of the flames. Mr. Dubois was a little distance from his home. His family happened to be absent. He heard a south a mighty roaring and thought a cyclone was coming. The blackness of the sky added to this belief. He ran still further from the building to escape any flying sticks that might come to the ground. He threw himself down at the foot of a stump. He was under the root. Scarcely was he on the ground before the awful heat and the fire showed that he had to contend, not with a cyclone, but with flames. There was a well a few feet away, into which he jumped. It was about twelve feet deep and was dry. Above him he could see the rolling cloud of flames high in the air and then down close to the ground. His position grew stifling and the air seemed to be closing in on him. He could only breathe by clawing a hole in the damp earth and pressing his face to the side. As soon as one once got too stifling he would crawl a little further and then he would crawl a little further. The well filled with smoke and gas, but after a time that seemed hours, but was probably about thirty minutes, he managed to clamber out.

Mr. May's amended petition was served upon the counsel for the Pullman Car Co. yesterday afternoon and ask leave to file an amended petition, and also the information against the company, which follows the petition, according to the law governing quo warranto proceedings.

The main additional charges made in the amended petition are in relation to the Pullman Car Co. without charge or authority, operating a gas plant and plant in the city of Chicago, and also that the Pullman Car Co. realizes a large profit by selling water to the Pullman residents. The company also, it is represented, supplies steam heat to many of the business houses and apartment houses for pecuniary profit. The company also, it is represented, operates a "truck farm" by the company is charged, and this, the court is told, can not be covered by a charter to operate a truck farm. The company is charged with the sale of liquors by the Pullman company in its cars while in transit is also deemed by the court to be a direct violation of its charter rights.

The ownership of seventeen acres of unoccupied land south of Lake Calumet, by the Pullman company is also charged. The petition says that this amounts to a real estate speculation.

DUNSMITH, W. Va., Sept. 5.—While Ex-Gov. Wilson was addressing a large democratic meeting Tuesday afternoon, Camdenters followed Marshal Vinson's tactics of the past month and interrupted the speaker. Wilson's friends attempted to eject them, when a bloody fight followed. A hundred revolvers were fired at the same time. Two shots barely escaped Wilson, one passing almost through his hair. Cooler heads finally prevailed, and the fight was continued his address without further interruption.

Among those shot Tuesday afternoon were J. W. Frisbie, who died Tuesday night, and Tobias Ferguson, who is said to be mortally wounded. It is now expected that United States deputies fired upon the crowd first, they were charged with Frisbie's murder.

GLASS ROOF
OF THE BREWERY HOUSE OFFICE, CHICAGO, Falls With a Crash.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—Shortly before 4 a. m. Tuesday the glass roof which covered the entire office of the Breweorth house on Madison street fell with a crash. The clerk was the only person in the office at the time and he barely escaped being crushed by the falling glass, iron and woodwork. The guests, who were awakened by the noise rushed to the office to find a mass of crushed glass and other debris. There was something of a panic in the corridors of the hotel when the noise was first heard, but the night clerk quickly assured the guests there was no danger and their fears subsided. Had the accident happened a little earlier probably many persons would have been killed or injured, as the Breweorth office is filled with guests and loungers usually until long after midnight. The accident is supposed to have been caused by a heavy exhaust pipe falling from the roof to the skylight.

Leavening Power

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Hannibal was in a ferment. A most foul murder had been done. Experts had declared and the evidence was plain that the crime had not been committed for the purpose of robbery. Nor a too had been forced. If the culprit was not a inmate of the house, he had been admitted by someone on the inside. The people demanded a searching inquiry. None was made, and they grew more and more indignant.

There was a sale of the dead man's personal effects a few weeks after the tragedy. He left three came from far and near. Several were gathered one evening in the parlors of the mansion. Mrs. Stillwell said word that the crime had not come down. Presently the front door opened, and Dr. Hearne walked in without knocking, and hurried up stairs. The company talked until quite late, and at midnight a step was heard on the stair. Dr. Hearne came down and walked toward the door.

"You have forgotten your medicine case, Doctor," Mollie still well said to him. "No, I haven't," he replied. "Your mother is very nervous and I shall be obliged to come back."

It occurred to some of those present that the family physician was indispensable to the widow of Amos Stillwell, and that he must be wonderful powder her nerves. It was soon after this Dr. Hearne announced that it would be necessary for his patient to undergo an operation, and that he would take her to Battle Creek, Mich., where he could secure rest and treatment at a sanitarium. Mrs. Stillwell would accompany them. Word came that the widow was much improved. In a few weeks she was able to return home. Before doing so, however, Mrs. Stillwell wrote to Lawyer H. B. Anderson, employing him to attend to her legal affairs. Mr. Anderson was the prosecuting attorney. He made the widow's case, and prevent her from attending to the details of business.

Mrs. Stillwell was not completely restored to health, as her friends soon learned. One day she saw a double-edged ax in the window of a hardware store and swooned away. At another time while crossing the street she came upon a laborer with pick uplifted. She swooned again, crying, "Take it away!" There were people enough about to see that the widow's agitation was assumed; that she was acting a part, though they did not admit the did it was true.

All this time the Grand Jury had been diligently at work. But somehow it could find at nothing taking place. It adjourned in disgust, after having left a sealed package containing all the evidence it had collected as a legacy to the next Grand Jury. It learned several important things, however. One of the jurors thought him that if one ax would whittle enough buried through the air another box, so they tried it, and it made no noise at all. Indeed they experimented with the ax very as the murderer used, with the same result. They then concluded that something else must have made the "whistling" sound Mrs. Stillwell heard.

All things must have an end time, and at the world intervened into the tragedy, developing any solution of the tragedy, it gradually ceased to be discussed. Nearly a year had passed and the public had almost forgotten that there had been a murder, when someone said that Dr. Hearne and Mrs. Stillwell were to be married. Formal announcement confirmed the rumor. The indignation of the people knew no bounds. They denounced the approaching nuptials as a reproach upon the community and demanded to know what had become of the law. These matters may or may not have reached the ears of Dr. Hearne and his fiancée. At any rate they were married.

When they drove to the station to take the train their carriage was hired on the way. Did the fair bride remember the other wedding day and the rice and the supper?

was placed in a academy for young ladies in Indiana. Dr. and Mrs. Hearne continued their journey to St. Joseph. In a few weeks they with their children went to Los Angeles, Cal. Various and conflicting reports came from there. One was to the effect that Mrs. Hearne's maid was going away. Another that she was about to sue for divorce. All were afterwards denied.

Meanwhile another Grand Jury had been sworn at Hannibal. The Stillwell murder occupied its attention, as it had that of every Grand Jury since the tragedy. Like its predecessor this Grand Jury reviewed the testimony, expressed regret that so great a crime should go so long unpunished and the hope that some future Grand Jury might receive conclusive evidence upon which to bring indictments. Then it adjourned.

More than a year before Richard Stillwell offered a reward of $1000 for the capture and conviction of his father's slayer. He imposed but one condition—that the detectives should not conduct any investigation upon the theory that the murderer gained entrance to the house through collusion with someone on the inside. His friends say that he would give $5000 to see his father's butcher dangle at a rope's end, but that he loves his sister and little brothers too well to see them suffer for a crime of which they are innocent. The Stillwell murder remains as much of a mystery as it was on that December morning when the Stillwell family heard the report of the police from the cruel stones when she ran half clothed across the street to tell Dr. Allen of the tragedy.

A Cincinnati bicycle man has taken an immense contract. He has agreed to equip one of Mayville's former citizens with a wheel warranted not to bend nor break. The gentleman who interested in a surprising wheel of such high grade is Mr. Joseph W. Grimes, who weighs just exactly 444 pounds. He says that if the wheel fits him he'll enter the Poorman road race next year. The bicycle is to be made of 16-gauge steel piping and when completed will weigh only thirty-five pounds.
